

HAWTHORNE, PRISONER, IN PRISON'S MONOTONY

"Good Words" Is Out Again,
Full of Interesting Articles for Everyone

The appalling day-after-day sameness of prison life is the subject of an editorial in the latest number of "Good Words," the Atlanta Federal Prison paper.

"It is darkness and death to live in a prison," says the editorial in part. "It is a crime in a man to such an extent as a crime. It is an unnatural human existence. The impulse of self-preservation fights against it."

It is the monotony of the life that it menaces the integrity of the man as well as of the body. The man turned to sameness in the prison; and not one case in a hundred in prison is due to sameness in one aspect or another of the life.

After the editorial is reprinted, outside the prison, Hawthorne, son of the Rev. Dr. Horace Bushnell, is a writer of much ability.

at Hawthorne's, all the editorial staffs of the Atlanta Journal are given to prisoners. In labor jails they are more than literally to death.

Atlanta Drama League May Stage Greek Play In the Open Air Soon

The ambitious plan to stage a Greek play in the open is part of the present year program of the Atlanta branch of the Drama League of America, says Mrs. William C. Spiker, president of the branch. Mrs. Spiker says also that the league hopes to perfect a Shakespearean pageant like that given by the school children of Chicago two years ago. As many as 2,000 children may be included in the various parts, says she. This pageant will come under the direction of the Junior department of the league, where, as Mrs. Spiker expresses it, "the first work of developing good taste for the drama is initiated."

Mrs. Spiker speaks enthusiastically of the league's program for the coming season. She has talked with Homer George, manager of the Atlanta theater, where, she says, legitimate drama still is presented, and she has found him very much interested and cordially willing to co-operate in the work of the organization. Among the dramas that will be seen at the Atlanta theater this season are several which the Drama League of America approves.

Mrs. Spiker says that the Atlanta organization will post its members as to the time of these plays, and give them support and attendance of them.

In the case of other wholesalers, the retailer will not feel the benefit of the reduction until the beginning of the new week. George Walker, buyer for Walker Bros., Wednesday said: "Our price to the retailer will be changed Monday to meet the reduction. Our present price is 5 cents. The majority of retailers will sell their trade at a 1-1/2 cents."

LOCAL GROCERS EXPECT FURTHER DROP IN SUGAR

Lower Price Will at Once Be Made Effective in Retail Trade, They Say

Local wholesale grocers look for sugar to continue to decline, even after the thirty-point drop in refined sugar Wednesday morning. "Unusually," they credit the decline to the new tariff, and believe that the present price of 4-1/2 cents per pound will not long remain low water mark. However, all qualify their remarks about the sugar question by saying that the market is controlled by the trust and not by supply and demand.

J. J. Simmons, buyer for Kelley Brothers, when informed of the reduction in prices, said: "The price will immediately become effective to retailers. Those retailers, who are cash grocers, will then feature the price of sugar at the new market standard, some will advertise so many pounds for a dollar and try to get ahead of their competitors."

"But the grocers who cater to the high price trade," continued Mr. Simmons, "will not reduce the price on their present stock of sugar. They will wait until they make purchases at the reduced price."

In the case of other wholesalers, the retailer will not feel the benefit of the reduction until the beginning of the new week. George Walker, buyer for Walker Bros., Wednesday said: "Our price to the retailer will be changed Monday to meet the reduction. Our present price is 5 cents. The majority of retailers will sell their trade at a 1-1/2 cents."

JEWISH NEW YEAR
BEGINS WEDNESDAY

Service Wednesday Night Followed by the Ten Days of Atonement

The Jewish New Year season begins Wednesday at sundown, and the Atlanta members of that faith will celebrate the occasion by services in all of their synagogues. It will be the beginning of the year 5674 of the Jewish calendar. The service will open with the blowing of the ram's horn from the steps of the several synagogues, in accordance with an ancient custom. With the ending of the service Wednesday night there begins the ten days of atonement, devoted to rest, prayer and fasting. The first of these days, Thursday, is called Rosh Hashanah. The tenth day will be Yom Kippur, the most solemn day of the Jewish calendar. Yom Kippur will begin at sundown, Friday, October 10, and will last until sundown the next day. During that day no member of the faith will work. All will spend it in fasting and prayer and self-contemplation. Thursday, Rosh Hashanah, will be in the evening at the Beth Israel synagogue, corner of Washington and Clark streets, during the holidays. Rabbi I. J. Levine will hold New Year services at Red Men's hall, 85 Central avenue, beginning at 8:30 o'clock Wednesday evening. He will address his new congregation, the Beth Israel Hebrew congregation, which will deliver special service on Thursday at the synagogue on South Pryor street.

W. E. CHAPIN ILL IN PHILADELPHIA HOSPITAL

Well Known Insurance Man Is Taken Suddenly Sick and Was Operated on

The fact has just become known among the friends of W. E. Chapin, the Atlanta insurance man, that he was operated upon in Philadelphia last Monday. Telegrams from the German hospital of Philadelphia, Wednesday, brought the information to Richard Palmer, associated with him in his insurance business in this city. Mr. Chapin was recuperating very nicely from the operation and that his entire recovery would be a matter of a few days. Mr. Palmer stated Wednesday that Mr. Chapin was returning from a pleasure trip when he stopped over in Philadelphia, some three or four days ago, at the head offices of two insurance companies—the Pennsylvania City Insurance company and the Fire Association of Philadelphia. Almost the day of his arrival there he became suddenly ill, and had to be removed to a hospital, where the physicians commenced an operation. According to the operation was performed Monday, with excellent results. Mr. Palmer stated that Mr. Chapin probably will not be able to leave Philadelphia, however, for some three or four weeks.

IN LOCAL THEATERS

ATLANTA—Little Boy Blue: FORSYTH—Vandavia. ATLANTA—Little Boy Blue: FORSYTH—Vandavia. ATLANTA—Little Boy Blue: FORSYTH—Vandavia.

At the Atlanta Wednesday night and Thursday matinee and night Henry W. Savage will offer the international success "Little Boy Blue." At the head of the presenting cast will be found Otis Harlan, who as Dupont, the French detective, the character which he originated and played through the long New York engagement, has scored the crowning success of an exceptionally distinguished career as a comedian.

The story of "Little Boy Blue" has to do with the theme of nursery games. It is comic opera, pure and simple—comic opera at its best and at its biggest. Recently, the production is superb and it is doubtful if anything in recent years can be compared with this of being in the matter of costumes.

"Robin Hood," the best comic opera America has produced, will be sung at the Atlanta Friday and Saturday, with a cast of 150. It is a pleasure to announce that this masterpiece, which has been sung in the most famous theaters in the coming production by artists of the first rank, will be sung in this city. The title role will be sung by Missa Fennell, from the Imperial opera, St. Petersburg, whose splendid tenor voice will sing the role of Robin Hood. He will be played by George Frothingham, who has played that part more than 5,000 times. His untouchable performance of the character is a classic and no one else could play the jolly friar as he does. Karl Mason will be the Alan-a-Dale, who sings the always popular "O Promise Me," Joseph Parsons, a fine baritone, will be the Little John, and Jerome Daly, as Will Scarlet, will sing the famous "Armour Song." The chorus is especially fine vocally, and a notable feature of this company is the large orchestra carried by the organization.

A hint of quality is offered at the Forsyth this week. There are seven acts that blend splendidly, a bit of almost every variety composing the show. There is an unusually clever opener, and the tip company offering a good show.

Booth's Hyomei, the little doctor that has effectively benefited many thousands of sufferers from catarrh, bronchitis, cough and cold in the head, makes it easy and pleasant to treat your throat. Just pour a few drops in the inhaler and breathe it in—no stomach dosing to upset the stomach. The hostile, soothing and antiseptic air will reach every nook and crevice of the mucous membrane of the nose and throat; will surely stop the irritation almost immediately; will allay the inflammation, drive out the foul odor; kill the germs and soothe the disease.

Hyomei, as sold by druggists everywhere, will quickly and surely relieve catarrh and inflammation of the breathing tract, and restore the voice. If you suffer from offensive breath, running of mucus, frequent sneezing, husky voice, discharge from the nose, droppings in the throat, sneezing, coughing, crusts in the nose, watery eyes and general weakness and debility, or any other symptoms of catarrh, you should use Hyomei at once.

A complete Hyomei outfit, including inhaler and bottle liquid, costs only $1.00, and an extra bottle of liquid, if afterwards needed, is but 50 cents. (Adv.)

W. C. BYRD NAMED
AS FREIGHT AGENT

Circulars have been received in Atlanta announcing the appointment of W. C. Byrd as traveling freight agent. Agent Charleston fast freight line, re-appoints to James T. Scott, commercial agent, Atlanta.

Byrd is widely known in transportation circles and his connection with the Clyde line is a return to a position of honor. He was formerly connected with the local office for some time.

There are plenty of interesting scenes and clever dialogue and the play as a whole keeps the audience genuinely interested.

Two large audiences witnessed Zeke, the Country Boy, at the matinee and night performances yesterday at the Bijou. Manager Kelly's selection of this play has struck a popular chord, as the various characters are true to life, the story of intense human interest and the scenic effects well presented. Eddie Black, as Zeke, is making his usual big hit. The play is brimful of good comedy, with enough of sensation to keep the interest at a fever heat.

Lyric patrons are voting this week's attraction, "Sold for Money," one of the most interesting plays in a dramatic way that has been offered at this theater recently. The story concerns a wealthy family whose head, a Pittsburgh millionaire with a past and a wife and daughter who are trying hard to break into society. The parents are endeavoring to make a match between their daughter and a young broker, with wealth and of good family. The girl falls in love with a dancing girl and marries her. Then the trouble begins.

R. F. D. No. 8, Maryville, Tenn.—"My baby, when three months old, took eczema on his face and head. His head and one side of his face were almost as solid as a sore. The eczema first was kind of a rash and then it broke out in water pimples and they would burn and looked very bad. I would lick and burn so badly that he could not rest as if he had just all fall out as one little bit of his head was perfectly bald. He could not sleep as night and was very cross."

"I tried... and other remedies without any relief at all. He only got worse all the time until I used Cuticura Soap and Ointment. He had great relief. The first night my baby rested fine and was cross no more. I would have him with the Cuticura Soap and then apply the Cuticura Ointment twice a day, morning and night. He was soon cured and his hair began to grow back and now he has just beautiful fine hair and has no sign of eczema." (Signed) Mrs. H. D. Chaboud, Jan. 28, 1913.

"Uncle Remus and the Wren's Nest."

There has been issued under the auspices of the Uncle Remus Memorial Association a booklet biography of Joel Chandler Harris that should be read and treasured the nation over. It is the most comprehensive and certainly the most delightful sketch of the beloved storyteller yet published. This brochure, entitled "Uncle Remus and the Wren's Nest," Joel Chandler Harris and Snap Bean Farm" has been prepared by Myrtle Lockett Avery and decorated by Susan McClellan, both of whom are pleasantly known, the one for her distinctive attainments in authorship and the other for her promising talent in art. Their work, and that of their associates, including men and women who were peculiarly close to Mr. Harris' life and work, is truly described as "a labor of love throughout." Its design and its result are not only to give readers a complete, authentic account of "Uncle Remus," the writer, but also to bring them into the charmed circle of his intimate self—his friends, his springtime and autumn saunterings, his shy drooleries and that everlasting, elusive twinkle of spirit that was, and is, himself.

It is this homelike touch that distinguishes Mrs. Avery's sketch from ordinary efforts of the kind and warms it with the breath of a personal affection. Especially likeable, too, and especially valuable are the thirty illustrations with which the booklet is enriched. These include eleven portraits of Mr. Harris, the most rounded and happily chosen collection in existence. Besides these there is a notable Harris bibliography contributed by Miss Katherine Wooten, librarian of the Carnegie Library of Atlanta, and a delicately beautiful poem, "A Sign of the Wren's Nest," by Major Charles W. H. Harris.

The booklets are sold for the benefit of the Uncle Remus Memorial, a gracious cause to which all who cherish the genius and the memory of Joel Chandler Harris should contribute.

A Timely Plea for An Army Reserve.

It is to be hoped that Congress will respond, as the thoughtful public has, to Secretary Garrison's timely plea for an adequate army reserve. In his recent tour and on other appropriate occasions the Secretary has urged with good effect the need of a more modern and far-sighted policy of national defense. His views merit particular consideration for the reason that he is in no wise an alarmist but on the contrary a staunch advocate of peace and, indeed, opposed to the establishment of a great standing army. But he is open-minded and prudent enough to perceive the value of preparedness as a means to peace itself as well as to security in time of danger.

"The need for an army," he has said, "arises from the fact that it takes two parties to keep the peace, and at least any nation can control only one party, namely, itself." In the same connection, he has said, "It seems inexcusable neglect and blindness not to provide in times of peace the proper method for augmenting the small standing army as it would be augmented in time of war." The fact is there is but one way of reasonable escape from the burden of maintaining a large regular army in the United States, and that is through the development of an ample reserve force.

One means to this end, thinks Secretary Garrison, is to reduce the required term of army enlistment to one or two years of service with the colors and to make army life as profitable and thereby more inviting. The shortened term of enlistment would attract many young men who recognize the value of soldierly discipline, but who are now unwilling to bind themselves for a comparatively long period of years at the end of which they will return to ordinary pursuits, unequipped for any particular vocation.

Enlistment for two years would make a man efficient in military discipline. He would at least be fitted for practical service in case his country needed him; and after his retirement he would be subject to call should an emergency arise. In this way the army could be held within conservative bounds as regards its size and at the same time it would be continually developing an efficient body of trained soldiers. There would be little or no additional tax upon the Government, yet the national defense would be steadily growing stronger.

Directly related to this plan is that of making the army of broader educational value. It is Secretary Garrison's idea to offer the enlisted men opportunities for practical training that will fit them for useful occupations as citizens. This is akin to Secretary Daniels' conception as the navy which he has said should be in one of its aspects a great university, beginning with primary departments and ending with what might be termed a post-graduate school, in which trades and professions could be acquired.

Whatever the means may be, it is certain that all the important end is to reinforce the present army with a numerous, well-prepared body of reserves. To maintain our small army in peace time at maximum efficiency, with the most perfect organization and supplied with officers of the most advanced training. "Only by so doing," as Mr. Garrison declares, "can our present small army effectively act as a nucleus for the expansion that will be necessary in time of war."

The development of a reserve force must of course, take into account the encouragement of the National Guard throughout the country, for therein lies a mainstay of strength for the regular army. This is a well-considered and eminently conservative plan of strengthening the national defense. It must, to be sure, be supplemented by the upbuilding of an adequate navy. This policy impresses a larger and larger number of thinking citizens; Congress should open the way for its practical application.

The Profits of Georgia Truck Farming.

Experiments in asparagus growing have proved so successful in the country around Marshallville that planters are preparing to double their acreage for next season. A few years ago the production of this vegetable for market purposes was scarcely known in that or any other district of Georgia; indeed, all truck farming was regarded as a doubtful venture. But the idea of a new agriculture and of diversified crops has been forging steadily forward, winning converts in every part of the State and always holding them. Some seasons ago a group of progressive farmers near Marshallville decided to try their fortune at asparagus. They began with a few beds and sold to a limited territory. Their profits outlasted expectation, so much so, indeed, that they determined to increase their output to a point where carload shipments to the east would be possible. As a result five hundred or more acres of asparagus were under cultivation this year in that one county; and by next year there will be a thousand acres.

This is but one among many examples of the encouraging progress of truck growing in Georgia. Tomatoes grown in the southern part of the State brought record prices in New York the past summer; and other table products found a ready and profitable market in distant sections. Wherever truck farming has been tried faithfully and intelligently, it has yielded substantial, if not really wonderful, results.

The increasing interest in this industry now observable throughout the State signifies much for Georgia's development and prosperity. It means sure and richer returns from the soil, a more independent agriculture, more adequate food supply, a broader variety of interests and of opportunity, a wider advertisement of the State's natural resources. It means that we shall no longer be independent upon a single crop, the success and value of which are continually at hazard; but that we shall have plentiful and wealth-producing crops the twelve-month around.

SPANKING FATHER

By Dr. FRANK CRAWFORD.
(Copyright, 1913, by FRANK CRAWFORD.)

The country was agitated some days ago by the news of a gentleman from Indiana, a preacher, too, who had desired to spank his wife.

Although I have enrolled my name on the list of those who do not believe in spanking children, I do not wish to be taken as being opposed to spanking per se.

Speaking is a most wholesome and health-giving exercise, and it is not without its mental and moral advantages by-product.

Fathers often need it, and they are fortunate if they have some husky enough to give them what they are suffering for.

Why, also, when innumerable children are being daily pounded a posteriori and nobody seems to think it anybody's business to interfere, should all this hullabaloo arise when one child proceeds to turn the tables and castigate a bit? What are we coming to? Where is our personal liberty? Where the inviolability of family secret? What next?

There are a lot of people who need spanking. Let me call a few to your mind.

There is the college youth who spends his nights and days in acquiring a set of rotten habits and cultivating an assortment of bad notions, when he ought to be trying to learn something in return for the money his parents are advancing. He is going to be a glided bohemian, simply because there is no proper outlet for him over the knee and who some sense into him.

There is the down-and-out, the man who thinks the world is against him, who can't try again, and who believes there is nothing now left for him but to go out into the garden and eat worms. There is no use talking to him. The only remedy for his case is a touchy lather and a strong right arm.

There are the women who are so sorry for themselves, who have every disease they hear of, whose complaints are the by-product of the sin they have committed. Of course we would not strike a woman; there ought to be a spanking machine.

Indeed, there is the whole army of selfishity; the weepers who rule their husbands by the "tyranny of tears"; the naggers, human mosquitoes, and the "female" of the species is more deadly than the male; the drunken loafers who "can't" quit making beats of themselves; the gentlemen content to let their wives do the living, the dining and the washing; the fast public wares, whose eyes insult every decent woman passing; the individual daughters who lounge about reading novels or marinating their nails while mother washes the dishes; the egotist perky as a banana; the miser and his misdeeds; and the whole dregs of idlers, who never dream of doing any of the world's work, are content to amuse themselves depending on other people's sweat and blood.

To say, look upon themselves as the superior class. These are the shingles and the shillies! Let us have no more of this kind of thing. Let us have the wheel run the Maiden of Newburg! No. Turn them all in to the State, and let the State take care of them. And up-n the place the Creator especially designed for correction upon the soul's heels.

The question may arise, Who is going to decide whether individuals are to be spanked? The answer is simple. If no one has any other nomination to offer, I will decide.

The methods of science are not the only way, though they are our way, the British scientist told his audience, "of arriving at the truth. Many scientific methods are in operation, and many of them are the result of the exaggerated dogmatism which our predecessors have bequeathed to us in the past."

Now at last we of the new era have been victorious; we inherit the fruits of the age long conflict, and the science is in our hands. Let us use it to the old mistake of thinking that ours is the only way of extending the frontiers of knowledge, and that all others are worthless and mistaken.

It was M. Bergson, who, in similar fashion, charged that the scientists of today were attempting to reduce life to its principles by rule of thumb, concentrating on purely quantitative measurements, and forgetting that life is as well as a matter of quality.

We may suspect somewhat that the charges of syncretized logic and philosophy which have been brought against M. Bergson were not actuated as much by prejudice against a new and foreign viewpoint as by the honest desire to make life more real to us.

In short, the scientists have been as humanly dogmatic in their position as we have been in ours.

In the past it may be conceded that in a relative sense we call the world's truth has emerged of a finer quality, like beaten gold, because it has come through the conflict of sharp contention. It is likewise a fact that humanity has been retarded many years by the opposition of the men who closed their reason to light with the shutter of prejudice.

The history of abstract thought is full of examples. Who was so sharply persecuted by the early Protestants as Luther from Catholicism, as the Protestant Nonconformist and the Puritan. The Puritans, who history ironically states that they fled from religious persecution, enacted the Connecticut Blue Laws, drove Roger Williams out into the snow, and hanged the Salem witches.

It is because of our memory of this kind of an unwelcome past that we logically view scientists who, in the face of a rigorous and uncompromising attitude on the part of their coworkers, are courageous enough to plead for an open mind toward what may still be unproven and unorthodox.

What Sir Oliver Lodge said at Birmingham may be some far off day of greater knowledge be noted as the opening words of an epoch of a New Rationalism.—Kansas City Star.

A humorist may look funny in a silk hat. Blessed is the thought that has a rose to justify it.

Some people grumble because the road to success isn't paved.

Even a wise man can't help looking like a fool at his own wedding.

FROZEN MINDS

THE man who boasted that he had never changed an opinion since he turned forty was betraying a symptom, which exists in some degree or another, are forearmed against it. In fact, it is so common that we accept it as one of the conditions of growing old. A French proverb speaks of men whose minds "freeze at forty"; and a curious bit of corroboratory testimony comes from the Yale scholar who has just reported the results of his investigation in a typical "Village of a Thousand Souls." His conclusion, briefly put, is that the finer type of mind keeps growing through middle and old age up to the loss of faculties which ends in death; and that the poorer minds lie down to rest at an age between thirty-five and forty.

A visitor returning to the village after an absence of ten years is shocked at the relative absence of a large part of the population.

This trait can be checked up by individual observation. All of us have noticed, in the case of close acquaintances, that certain remarks on certain subjects will invariably draw forth the same reply, as when the swimmer remarks that when the air is chill the water seems warmer. Whole families will repeat the commonplace for years with an air of profound scientific observation; which fact betrays that in all these cases the minds have never been active enough to carry the idea a step farther, or even curious enough to inquire whether there is a beyond into which it can be carried.

Our systems of education are largely to blame for this mental stupor. They drilled us rigorously, to get a modicum of information into our skulls in the shortest time allowed them that they emphasized learning as a duty and not as the mere gratification of all quest. Hence the average mind welcomes the day when he escapes from school and can earn his living and live his life without studying. No self-cultivation is more foolish. To stop learning is to stop living. Any school or college which does not turn out its pupils with a diploma containing a diploma certifying that the student is a failure. But nothing is more common than the sight of an "educated" man (whose education ceased with a diploma certifying that he was an educated man) whose mental hunger urges him ever onward.

What more depressing than the middle-aged mind which plods forever in its tiny circle like a bug under a tumbler—but with this difference, the bug is trying to get out. What more depressing than an old person with a mind afraid for new things? They are stronger than the young. For they have the wisdom and wisdom of the years with the eager enthusiasm of youth. To such as these there is no such thing as age. Their minds are white, their eyes are as blue as a child's, their cheeks may be riddled and their joints stiff, but their eyes will always be bright, and their minds will always be young. The longer they live the longer they are. This is a refuge from the inevitable march of the years that is ours for the asking. Why so comparatively few of us ask is the puzzle.—Boston Transcript.

Indian Summer

THE god Nanihobu of the Osageans would sit on a rock on the shore of Lake Superior and smoke a pipe, a week or two, before he went away to find a new place to sit. During the week he smoked the smoke blown from his mouth and curling up from his feet was carried by the winds and humans saw it as a haze.

"This," said the Rev. Peter Jones in 1841, "produces a haze of smoke, which is called Indian summer. In the Indian mind there was nothing in the legend of Nanihobu concerning Indian summer until he put it there. The English have taken it from the Indians and borrowed 'St. Martin's summer' from the French."

This night the breeze assuredly I'll raise; Expect Saint Martin's summer, halcyon days, Since I have entered into these wars.

—Henry VI, part 1, act 1, scene 2.

They also know "St. Luke's summer." St. Luke's day falls on October 18, All Hallow's November 1, and St. Martin's day is November 11. The English called the American accepted the season as "Indian summer," but without leaving its reason for the "Indian." It is a sign that the Indian mind was not the underbrush in the forest in November and that the smoke caused the haze noted as a characteristic of the pleasant days of late fall and gave the period its name. It is surmised, also, that the deific quality of the retdink might have been lent to the settlers in the Indian mind.

A kindred suggestion has been that after an early frost of snow, after that from the incidence of the immediate hardships of winter, came the peaceful days or weeks of clear calm when the settler, confident that the winter had passed, could find comfort of the fortified Indian village in expectation of severe weather, would be lulled by the sudden fog making use of "Indian summer" for a fortnight.

Just why the English colonists gave the name they know. All Hallow's, St. Martin's and St. Luke's for the term by which now not only we but the English call the season. The Indian summer, however, is not set forth in the earliest records which refer to the name.

One successful Americanism which supplanted an old English name even in the verse of a poet laureate commemorating the happy, placid years of a venerable queen.

It is a time of no fixed calendar limits. An early record refers to Indian summer in January. Thorowood notes the characteristic weather of the period at dates varying from September 27 to December 15.

The German "Altweibsommer" (Old Wife's summer) and "Nachsommer" (after summer) fall in late autumn. The Scotch equivalent was "Go summer," or "Goose summer." All Hallow's and St. Martin's were days of late fall and the prevailing American notion of Indian summer is late rather than early fall.

Of more local meaning and less general use is "Squaw winter," of tempestuous furies which threaten an immediate leveling of all meteorological rigors to the will of the soil influence of stirring warmth. Thus in sections the essence of Indian summer is not conceded until there has been a mock winter preceding the mock summer.—Chicago Tribune.

Quips and Quiddities

A reporter was interviewing Thomas A. Edison. "Are you, sir," he said to the inventor, "the first talking machine?"

"No," Mr. Edison replied, "the first one was made long before my time—out of a rib."

A Boston minister once noticed a crowd of urchins clustered around a dog of doubtful pedigree.

"What are you doing, my little men?" he asked with fatherly interest.

"Swaggin' lies," volunteered one of the boys. "The minister tells the biggest one gets the purp."

"Shocking!" exclaimed the minister. "I wonder your father ever thought of telling a untruth."

"Yes," said the minister. "The dog's a liar."

CROP FAILURES

By FREDERICK J. HARRIS.

The record of terrible seasons of hunger belated early in the world's history, and the terrific toll taken by the famine of human life can only be approximated. Some famines were due to drought, some to deluges, a few to war, and some to isolation, any of them could never occur under present methods of communication and transportation, and it seems certain that the widespread distress and the great death toll of the past can never recur. No land was exempt from them in the first fifty centuries of human history.

The nineteenth century, especially the first eight decades of it, probably showed a greater death toll from famine than any other two centuries together. It was during this century that the Irish potato famine started the tide of Irish immigration toward America shores, and demonstrated that truly it is a will that blows no good. And it was also during this century that India and China had the worst visitations in all their history.

The Bible frequently speaks of famines in Palestine and its neighboring countries, and the seven lean years of Biblical Egyptian history are said to have begun 1703 B. C. There is evidence pointing to the fact that this period was also over the people of ancient Palestine. From that time to the end of the thirteenth century there were nearly 40 famines extensive enough to be listed in the literature of hungry Rome.

Rome, early in its history, felt the pangs of hunger. In 435 B. C. there was a famine so severe in the Eternal City that thousands threw themselves into the Tiber to escape the pangs of starvation. In 132 A. D. Ireland was the scene of a famine that was said to be the first time in history where a great wave of emigration was forced upon a people by crop failures. A century later famines were suffered from another visitation, and the people are said to have become so famished that they gnawed the bark from trees like rabbits. Within a generation another famine overtook England, and it was said 40,000 people starved.

In 211 A. D. Antioch was visited by a famine so serious that a bushel of wheat brought 200 pieces of silver, and a hundred years later Italy was the scene of a scarcity of food so great that many parents ate their children. In 1647, in England, nearly 700,000, and Ireland suffered a fate as terrible as that of Italy, and Scotland and Ireland in turn suffered a like fate. For nearly a century the people of Wales were "covered with dead bodies of men and beasts," starved to death.

The seven years of the lean kind of Egyptian history told about in the Biblical story—Joseph found a servant that a bushel of wheat brought 200 pieces of silver, and a hundred years later Italy was the scene of a scarcity of food so great that many parents ate their children. In 1647, in England, nearly 700,000, and Ireland suffered a fate as terrible as that of Italy, and Scotland and Ireland in turn suffered a like fate. For nearly a century the people of Wales were "covered with dead bodies of men and beasts," starved to death.

In 1525 England was the victim of a drought in which no rain fell from Whit Sunday to autumn, and the prices of foodstuffs rose to unprecedented heights, only a few people were able to buy food. This time as a result of cold north winds in the growing season. Many thousands starved, and fifty ships full of foodstuffs from Germany and the Netherlands of London were prohibited from dealing in this food. In order to prevent any one from taking advantage of the extraordinary prices, the government passed the legislative efforts that were made to hold down the price of foodstuffs. The result was that a bushel of wheat was as there was any to sell and in the end some 25,000 people starved to death in London alone.

One of the longest famines in the history of the race was during the last part of the thirteenth century, when, for twenty years together there was an unbroken chain of crop failures, of prices that were all but prohibitive to the poor, and of hunger throughout the length and breadth of England. Parliament, at the request of the king, passed a law regulating prices, and a royal proclamation was made forbidding the manufacture of beer.

In 1521 England had what is regarded by most authorities as the last of its serious famines. But this was the beginning of a series of great crop shortages in Ireland. In 1525, for 119 a bushel of wheat. A half century later there was a famine of three years in England, which was attributed to the hoarding of corn. The mayor and citizens of London took out of the orphan's chest in their guild hall money to buy corn, and other funds beyond its reach, and provision was made whereby the government sold food to the poor at appointed prices, where they were able to pay the full price. The famine was over in 1547, hence, where they were not able to pay cash.

The English Poor Law dates from 1547 when Queen Elizabeth, who had been a child of the famine, issued a proclamation requiring government relief to be tendered by the justices of the peace to "poor of their communities."

One of the frequent complaints in England was that too much grain produced there was sold abroad. The Scotch equivalent was "Go summer," or "Goose summer." All Hallow's and St. Martin's were days of late fall and the prevailing American notion of Indian summer is late rather than early fall.

There were numerous famines in the seventeenth century, beginning with one in Russia, in which a half million people died. Wars caused famines in Ireland and in India during this century. In 1756 occurred the first of the great famines of India of which we have record. It is estimated that 2,000,000 people died during this famine, and the chronologers of the period say that the air was affected by the odors of decaying bodies that it was scarcely possible to go about without perceiving it and without hearing, also, the frantic cries of the victims of the famine who were seen at every stage of suffering—and death.

With the rapid growth of population during the nineteenth century, and the development of the transportation facilities, there were demands for food that could not be met. India and Ireland were the worst sufferers. Ireland, for example, had a famine in 1845 and 1846, and was repeated at intervals up to 1848. During the latter year it was supposed that a quarter of the population of Ireland starved.

In 1847, in England, nearly 700,000, and Ireland suffered a fate as terrible as that of Italy, and Scotland and Ireland in turn suffered a like fate. For nearly a century the people of Wales were "covered with dead bodies of men and beasts," starved to death.
